INVESTOR RELATIONS

One-day or two-day training course for executives

“Companies need to realise that once they go public, they are beholden to explain their plans and actions to the public,” Yusli Yusoff, former Bursa Malaysia CEO.

Many public-listed companies today face significant challenges in attracting investors to their stock. Their true worth to potential shareholders and institutional buyers often gets lost in translation.

Some companies attract publicity only after a crisis hits. By then, it may be too late. The unwanted scrutiny from the media can do serious damage to your reputation and stock value in the long term.

A proactive approach in formulating an effective media and investor relations strategy is the key to unlocking shareholder value. Armed with the right tools and knowledge, you can play a significant role to overcome low visibility and attract a wider following by investors, analysts and the financial press.

Learn how to:

- prepare and send out effective news releases on quarterly financial results, AGMs and EGMs.
- promote your brand and company to shareholders, investors, fund managers and analysts.
- deal effectively with queries from Bursa Malaysia.
- counteract negative publicity, effect damage control.
